Job Description

The Department of Law at Aarhus BSS, Aarhus University, invites applications for one or two 18 month postdoctoral positions offering applicants an exciting opportunity to join research projects in the field of jurisprudence.

The starting date is subject to mutual agreement.

The research project

In all academic disciplines law is influenced by technological developments and the rapid digitisation of society. The surrounding society increasingly demands research into the legal framework for development, deployment and decommissioning of new technologies. The Department of Law wishes to strengthen its research efforts in this field.

Job description

The successful applicants are expected to contribute significantly to the department's research into and teaching of the legal framework for development, deployment and decommissioning of new technologies and to its overall digitisation research strategy. We expect you to teach and supervise students at Bachelor's and Master's level and to carry out individual and group-based research of high international standard, which contributes to developing the academic field in question.

The successful applicants must be willing to actively pursue the department objective of securing increased external funding.

Physical presence at the department will be required.

Your qualifications

To qualify for a position as a postdoc you must hold a PhD or have equivalent academic qualifications.

Who we are

The Department of Law is one of the six departments at Aarhus BSS, one of the four faculties at Aarhus University. Aarhus BSS unites the business and social science-related research fields and brings them closer together to reflect the close relationship between society and the business community. As part of a Top 100 university, Aarhus BSS - and specifically the Department of Law - has achieved the distinguished AACSB, AMBA and EQUIS accreditations.

With more than 60 academic staff members and 15-20 PhD students, we have a dynamic, ambitious and academically diverse research and teaching environment. In addition, we focus specifically on attracting international researchers and PhD students to the department.

At the Department of Law, we teach and carry out high-level research within key fields of Danish, European and international law. In our research, we focus continuously on increasing the department's international impact - particularly in terms of publications. We strive to extend upon and develop our core research fields, but we also aim for our research to be at the vanguard of new judicial challenges in society and the business community. In our teaching, we strive to build bridges between theory and practice, amongst others by drawing on external teachers' practical experience.

On 1 March 2018 the Department of Law, Aarhus BSS, Aarhus University launched a pilot center - Center for Legal Informatics.
