Job Description

The Department of Political Science invites nominations and applications for a tenure-track position in Public Law. The Department is looking for individuals with a demonstrated potential for significant scholarly achievement, teaching excellence and service to the department, University and/or community. Preference will be given to candidates who have a clear theoretical orientation and have demonstrable skills in quantitative analysis and/or formal models. We particularly welcome applications from those with a focus on comparative judicial politics or candidates who would supplement existing departmental strengths in state politics, election law, or quantitative methodology.

Candidates are encouraged to submit their applications by September 15, 2019.
