communities. The bulk of their time will be devoted to independent research. Candidates should demonstrate a strong interest in a career involving teaching and research in law and philosophy. Typical candidates will have a post-graduate degree in law (e.g., J.D., LL.M., or S.J.D.) or a doctorate in philosophy. All post-graduate degrees should be completed no later than June 30, 2020. The fellowship offers a competitive salary, small research stipend, and full benefits with a start date of July 1, 2020.

One or two postdoctoral fellowships will be available depending on funding.

Interested candidates should apply online at <https://recruit.apo.ucla.edu/JPF04815>.

Please submit PDF copies of the following: 1) a cover letter; 2) CV; 3) A research statement focusing on the candidate's research interests in law and philosophy; 4) a writing sample; 5) a statement describing their experience and approach to fostering diversity in the classroom and the profession; and 6) three letters of recommendation. Letters submitted online may be addressed to the attention of Elsa Duong, Manager, Program in Law and Philosophy, UCLA School of Law, Box 951476, Los Angeles, CA 90095-1476. Applicants with teaching experience should also include their teaching evaluations, a summary thereof, or other testimonials concerning their teaching experience.

To facilitate blind review of writing samples et alia, applicants are asked to submit their writing samples, research statements, and diversity statements without references that would reveal their identities, professional titles, or institutions that granted their advanced degrees.

For full consideration of your application, please apply by Friday, November 15, 2019.
