The Fletcher School seeks to hire either one or two Adjunct Professors/Professors of Practice. The two classes that need to be taught are: International Environmental Law and Sustainable Development Diplomacy.

For International Environmental Law: This course addresses the nature, content, and structure of international environmental law. The course commences with an introduction to international environmental problems, together with basic principles of international law and environmental regulation. Specific topics include global warming, stratospheric ozone depletion, and exports of hazardous substances. Other topics may include marine pollution, forests, desertification, transboundary pollution, trade and environment, and development and environment. The course evaluates the role of international and non-governmental organizations; the interrelationship between international legal process and domestic law; and the negotiation, conclusion, and implementation of international environmental agreements.

Sustainable Development Diplomacy, it examines how to integrate economic, environmental and social equity goals in foreign policy-making. It discusses the emergence of sustainable development as a concept and international institutions and negotiation processes that facilitate its implementation. This course looks at the intersections of global environmental agreements and where there are opportunities for improved agenda-setting. It also examines how countries can and do “forum shop” to advance their goals, how they build coalitions and scale collective action. It offers insights from practice, trainings in mutual gains negotiations and complex UN multiparty negotiations. Students develop expertise in policy analysis and planning, strategic thinking and feedback management.

We are looking for professors who could teach one or both classes. In your application letter, please specify what position you are applying for, or whether you could teach both.
