Indigenous Nations.

The Faculty welcomes applications from all candidates with demonstrated excellence or a potential for excellence in teaching and research. We especially invite applications from those with interests principally in Criminal Law, Evidence Law, and Human Rights Law. The successful candidate will have the expertise or willingness to teach a mandatory Criminal Law or Evidence law class.

The successful candidate will contribute to teaching, research, and pedagogical development.

Areas of teaching and research interest

The Faculty is interested in scholars with either a demonstrated or developing research program in criminal law, evidence law, and/or human rights law. These areas will be of primary interest to the hiring committee. However, scholars with other specialties will also be considered.

The successful applicant will develop a focused research program preferably intersecting with or complementing their teaching duties. The position is expected to commence on July 1, 2024, or on a date mutually agreed upon. Salary and rank will be commensurate with experience and qualifications.

Responsibilities may include the ability to:

- Conduct research in the areas articulated above;
- Teach in the core of the JD curriculum;
- Teach elective courses related to the areas articulated above;
- Supervise and advise graduate students' research;
- Engage in service work in the Faculty, University, or broader practice/professional community; and
- Contribute to a collegial work environment where equity, diversity, inclusion, freedom of inquiry, respectful environment, and Indigenous legal traditions/orders are valued

Qualifications

The successful applicant will have:

1. an LL.B. or J.D.;
2. an LL.M. (or cognate graduate degree); and
3. a PhD or doctoral equivalent in law or cognate discipline (completed or in progress).
Demonstrated excellence in teaching and research may be considered in lieu of doctoral studies.
